American Muslim Women: Negotiating Race, Class, And Gender Within The Ummah (Religion, Race, And Ethnicity)

Synopsis

African American Muslims and South Asian Muslim immigrants are two of the largest ethnic Muslim groups in the U.S. Yet there are few sites in which African Americans and South Asian immigrants come together, and South Asians are often held up as a “model minority” against African Americans. However, the American ummah, or American Muslim community, stands as a unique site for interethnic solidarity in a time of increased tensions between native-born Americans and immigrants. This ethnographic study of African American and South Asian immigrant Muslims in Chicago and Atlanta explores how Islamic ideals of racial harmony and equality create hopeful possibilities in an American society that remains challenged by race and class inequalities. The volume focuses on women who, due to gender inequalities, are sometimes more likely to move outside of their ethnic Muslim spaces and interact with other Muslim ethnic groups in search of gender justice. American Muslim Women explores the relationships and sometimes alliances between African Americans and South Asian immigrants, drawing on interviews with a diverse group of women from these two communities. Karim investigates what it means to negotiate religious sisterhood against America’s race and class hierarchies, and how those in the American Muslim community both construct and cross ethnic boundaries. American Muslim Women reveals the ways in which multiple forms of identity frame the American Muslim experience, in some moments reinforcing ethnic boundaries, and at other times, resisting them.

Ã¢ ªKarimÃ¢ ªâ„¢s sensitive ethnographic work and well-written analysis provide engaging insights into the lives of contemporary American Muslim women. . . . [and] flow beautifully to its thoughtful conclusion.Ã¢ ªKaren Isaksen Leonard, author of *Muslims in the United States: The State of Research*Ã¢ ªâ„¢Jamillah KarimÃ¢ ªâ„¢s new book, American Muslim Women, is an insightful, well-written examination of the space where religion and race intersect in America. Implementing adept ethnographic skills to conduct interviews in two cities across the tangible ethnic boundaries between South Asian and African American Muslims, Karim provides insight into the complexities and tensions within the Muslim ummah, or community.Ã¢ ª-Journal Of Middle East WomenÃ¢ ªâ„¢s StudiesÃ¢ ªâ„¢American Muslim Women: Negotiating Race, Class, and Gender within the Ummah by Spelman College Professor of Religious Studies Jamillah Karim is a welcome departure from the usual portrayals of Muslim women in the U.S. as victims of their religion.Ã¢ ª-Color Lines

Jamillah KarimÃ¢ ª is an international lecturer in race, gender, and Islam in America. She was formerly Associate Professor of Religious Studies at Spelman College.Ã¢ ª She is the author ofÃ¢ ª American Muslim Women: Negotiating Race, Class, and Gender within the Ummah.

Though this book gives an interesting and well thought out account of Muslim women's experience, the author makes the argument that the group of Muslim women she identifies with is more inclusive, welcoming, and follows Islamic beliefs better than other Muslim women. While it is a well-written book, the obvious bias makes it limited in its ability to discuss the intricacies of Muslim interactions within group.

This was too much like a bunch of journal entries. It would have made a fine article, but there wasn't enough content for a whole book.

I picked up the book as I was interested in the topic from personal experiences and from my educational background. The book makes me wish I took a class on the topic during my undergraduate years on continued studying religious studies in grad school. Definitely more study in the subject area needs to be explored and this book is an excellent start to opening up the conversation, and this book contributes immensely to it. Actually it is will be a cornerstone in the field.

A thoughtful, well-written investigation into race, class and gender within our American Muslim Communities. Every American Muslim should read this book - both female AND male - as well as every person who identifies as a feminist.

Excellent explanation and analysis--puts names to many of the isms facing the American Ummah. I always enjoy meeting fellow American sisters in text and Karim does a wonderful job at revealing the intricacies of her subjects' lives. She has produced an enjoyable as well as educational text.

If you want to understand the complexities of the Muslim community, there is no better place to start than with this book. Ms. Karim did a wonderful job of capturing the nuances of race, class and gender in the Muslim community.
